WELCOME

Welcome to the 2nd Film Festival for Generations in Delhi and Mumbai. This festival is based on the European Film Festival for Generations which 2019 will be held for the 10th time in more than 100 communities all over Germany. Founded in 2010 and organized by the Institute of Gerontology at the Heidelberg University, the festival has the aim to transfer images of active ageing and to build a bridge between academic research and the general public to discuss age-related topics.

The Film Festival has grown steadily, quickly becoming Europe's biggest festival for and about older people. In Germany 2018 more than 15,000 mainly older persons visited the festival. 2013 the festival won the momentous “German Age Award” and in recent years, other European countries have joined the festival, such as Portugal, Great Britain, France, Belgium and the Netherlands.

This successful concept has been transferred to India first time in 2018 in the context of the Indo-German academic cooperation project “New Directions in ‘Active Ageing’ and ‘Age-friendly Culture’ in India and Germany” between Heidelberg University, Germany, and Jawaharlal Nehru University, India. The innovative, multifaceted program for interdisciplinary knowledge exchange focuses on the different ways the two countries approach the challenges and chances of demographic change and increasing life expectancy.

Over the course of the Film Festival, movies from both India and Germany dealing with topics such as housing, activity and creativity in old age, or dementia and care will be screened, followed by a post-screening debate about the topic with experts in the respective topic.

We hope, that we can make with this Film Festival a contribution to disseminate images of active, healthy and successful ageing. And perhaps we can foster a public discourse about ageing and demographic changes in India. The extension to Mumbai, the second location in India, we see as an exciting step into this direction.

Goethe-Institut / Max Mueller Bhavan Mumbai is the cultural institute of the Federal Republic of Germany and has been working actively in the fields of art, cinema, theatre, dance and literature by promoting programmes, that are interdisciplinary and promote cultural exchange of ideas with a special emphasis on ideas relating to civil society, environment and the digital. The institute works with local partners and always with a global – local perspective.

The Film Festival for Generations in Mumbai looks at one of the key situations that we face today, that is, issues related to ageing. It is important to foster a dialogue between generations to create awareness and to understand the different concerns about ageing, population and demographic changes. Goethe-Institut / Max Mueller Bhavan Mumbai is pleased to host this festival and is confident that it will be well received in Mumbai since it addresses this pivotal societal concern in a holistic manner.
The first Film Festival for Generations in Mumbai is a welcome move, I think, after having experienced this Film Festival in Delhi last year as part of the joint project “New Directions in ‘Active Ageing’ and ‘Age-friendly Culture’ in India and Germany“ of Heidelberg University and Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi.

It should help to identify and plan policies and programs for the ageing society in India with the changing demography of its ageing population. Moreover it is more important for young generations to be aware and prepare for it as the youth today and tomorrow is going to live longer than their previous generation due to welcome improvements in health and medical care. Increased longevity and declining fertility rates pose new challenges and perspectives for our society.

Understanding the similarities and contrasts in dealing with the old - in societies like Germany and India - and to differentiate the good and beneficial aspects of the traditional old culture as well as the changing new culture will definitely help the East and West both to face the challenges of new times.

There is no medium like the Film medium - the complete learning tool - as it combines both the languages - the language of words and the language of image and sound - both cognitive and emotional dimensions depending on the way film is made. It can help direct and indirect learning and the post screening discussion - the essential aspect of showing these films - help to learn the tricks of active intellectual and passive emotional communication. Learning is born with effective combination of interest and intelligence and application of it depends on the sensitive and intelligent implementation of the same. Film can help both if done in that way. So let us switch off the lights and open an inner eye also watching these films.

Cinema and film can bring all generations together – in many different ways and in many kinds of venues. Choosing a film that older and younger people can relate to, offering tea and coffee before the screening, and finding an expert, who can provide a question and answer session after the film, seems like a very promising start. But what about programme flyers, fundraising, advertising, involving stakeholders, service providers and volunteers?

An approach to follow might be the example of the founders of the European Film Festival for Generations. They sat over a cup of tea in the staff room of the Public Health Authority in Frankfurt, Germany, pondering how active ageing, intergenerational dialogue, social inclusion and scientific research could be combined. Six months later their first festival edition was officially opened in cinemas in Frankfurt and Heidelberg simultaneously. Or, even better, you create your own personal way to organize an intergenerational film festival. In this interactive workshop we will collect ideas, exchange experiences and hopefully motivate each other to make the festival idea grow and establish a sustainable and attractive event for older and younger audiences in New Delhi and other parts of India.

The rising life expectancy is in its present form historically unprecedented, and the question arises whether it has to be seen as a positive challenge or a threatening scenario. Internationally renowned gerontologists and experts take a stand and refer to the potentials of the new old age: On average, aged people today are healthier, better educated, and more vital than earlier generations. Based on examples from Germany and the USA, the movie illustrates the manifold ways how aged people keep on engaging themselves both socially and economically. Similar to the “Sputnik Shock” of 1957 which resulted in a wakening call for the US space research, the director and former German state minister for social affairs argues for a pioneering spirit which facilitates using these “gained years” for increased productivity and engagement in old age.
FORGET ME NOT

Caring Documentary of a Mother with Dementia

DIRECTOR
David Sieveking
Germany, 2012
92 minutes
with Gretel, Malte and David Sieveking

Documentary filmmaker David Sieveking allows us to accompany him on a very personal journey of his family. His mother Gretel suffers from severe dementia. To assist his father, he moves back in with his parents for a few weeks to care for his mother, while his father Malte gathers new strength. During this time he follows the care for and life of his mother with the camera. Despite her illness she doesn’t lose her will to live and passes that on to her son. Due to her open and honest way, David gets to know his mother anew and from a completely different angle. He reassembles the mosaic of his family’s history over the course of a movie that began as a movie about illness and ended up being about love.

The movie accompanies the German composer Bernhard König at his musical work with elderly people over a course of ten months: In a home for the elderly in Stuttgart, Germany, he asks the residents to tell him stories from their lives, based on which he creates their very personal “song of life”. In Cologne, Germany, he has formed an experimental choir with people 70 or older, as he is fascinated by the biographically imbued expressiveness of “wrinkled voices”. Together with professional musicians he creates fascinatingly beautiful scorings that lead to a moving concert in the end. With his innovative way of leading a musical dialogue with this elder generation he opens up creative spaces for dreams and the approach to personal trauma.
Dr. Chakrapani Shastri, a retired Sanskrit professor, is now suffering from Alzheimer’s disease. When he sees an elephant in the streets of Pune he follows the animal and its guide, leaving his daughter in panic and regret for losing sight of him. The movie joins both his daughter, who relives moments of the past while searching for her lost father, as well as Dr. Shastri as he lives his day with the elephant and its caretakers from moment to moment. Depicting the ways Alzheimer’s disease affects not just the live of the patient, but of all people around him, the movie outlines the importance of relationships, care, and affection instead of medical interventions, leading for all people involved to the not resigning, but forward-looking realization of Astu (So be it).
Both Germany and India face the challenges of “active ageing” and “age-friendly culture” but in different ways. With this purpose, the cooperation programme “New Directions in ‘Active Ageing’ and ‘Age-friendly Culture’ in India and Germany” has been established as a joint project of Heidelberg University (HU), Germany, and Jawaharlal Nehru University (JNU), India. The project is funded within the framework of Indo-German Partnership in Higher Education (IGP) by the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD).

The programme aims at connecting faculty, M.A. students, doctoral candidates and post-doctoral fellows. During the funding period (2016-2020), the programme not only develops research profiles on themes related to “active ageing” and “age-friendly culture” through pilot projects and PhD research, but also implements an innovative teaching profile through a series of prominent lectures, spring and summer schools, and the incorporation of the “Film Festival for Generations“. The project is designed to build upon existing synergies between JNU and HU by introducing a new topic that is of great relevance to both Germany and India.

Several events have been held in frame of the cooperation project in Germany and India such as a Kick-Off Event (Delhi 2016); a Spring School “Perspectives on an age-friendly Culture: concepts and methods” and a Workshop “Ageing and Residence” (Delhi 2017); an Opening Workshop “New Directions in ‘Active Ageing’ and ‘Age-friendly Culture’ in India and Germany” and a Winter School “Images of Age and Ageing” (Heidelberg 2017); a Workshop “Caring Relations, Caring for Ageing”, an Autumn School “Ageing and Gender in India”, the 1st Film Festival for Generations in New Delhi (Delhi 2018) and a Workshop “Political and Ethical Discourses on responsibility in and for old age” (Berlin 2019).
