When Yoga Suits Her: Negotiating Women’s Positioning in the Yoga Tradition (The case study of Iyengar yoga)

Agi Wittich
Hebrew University of Jerusalem

Today women are the majority of yoga practitioners, but it was not always the case. Until recently, yoga was practiced and taught by men and for men, creating a male-centered tradition. For this reason the Iyengar yoga tradition recognizes classical yoga practices as inadequate for women. Since 1935, B.K.S Iyengar (1918-2014), the founder of the tradition, developed specific yoga practices and re-interpreted key concepts, as an alternative for women. Later, Geeta Iyengar (1944-2018), his daughter and student, further conceptualized and established these practices.

Women-oriented Iyengar practices aim to address women’s needs, treating gynecological pathologies, adjusting ‘general’ practices, and recommending specific-postural-sequences for women-specific conditions, such as menstruation, pregnancy, and menopause. In addition, the Iyengar tradition provides women an imagined narrative and women-oriented interpretations of key concepts of classical yoga. This talk will explore the implications of women-oriented Iyengar yoga practice on both women’s’ positioning within the yoga tradition, and on the continuance of classical yoga tradition.

- Friday, 26th July 2019 • 16.00 - 18.00 hrs. (c.t.)
- CATS/SAI 010.00.01

Co-organised by the Department of Cultural and Religious History of South Asia and the Medical Anthropology Forum, Department of Anthropology (SAI)