Dying to be heard:
Hmong youth and marital norms, side notes from the field

This discussion addresses Hmong youth seeking destructive means to escape cultural and marital norms in Lao PDR. Specifically, the rise in suicides amongst young women desperate to have a voice in their home and community. A contextual overview is provided on the country highlighting the gap between policy, practice and participation and its impact on women, youth and vulnerable groups. Additionally side notes from the field are shared from the perspective of a health and human rights advocate conducting contract research riddled with political drivers and limitations.

All are cordially invited
