Financializing Healthcare in India? The Case of Impact Bonds

Since the 1980s, multilateral agencies and governments in many parts of the world have curtailed public spending for the health sector. Simultaneously, they have started to experiment with so-called “innovative” forms of financing healthcare. In this presentation, I discuss one such form: “impact bonds”, which attempt to connect social service provision with financial return in India. How are impact bonds designed and how do they function? What consequences does the introduction of performance-based funding and calculative techniques have for the health sector? And in what ways is the provision of healthcare reimagined?

All are cordially invited!
