Review: 17th European Conference on Modern South Asian Studies

Netty Bonouvrié is affiliated to the Documentation Centre for South Asia of the Kern Institute, Leiden University and is the regional editor for South Asia for the International Institute for Asian Studies’ Newsletter. This text was previously published in the IAAS Newsletter of 29 November 2002, and is available on the IAAS website (→ 1).

At the end of this summer the South Asia Institute of the Ruprecht-Karls-Universität Heidelberg, Germany, hosted the European Conference on Modern South Asian Studies, the seventeenth in a series of biennial conferences. Through the years this conference has become an important platform in Europe for the exchange of results of research on modern South Asia.

In the building of the Neue Universität, situated in the heart of the beautiful old town of Heidelberg, more than 300 participants from Europe, the United States, Australia, Japan, and South Asian countries assembled to attend this extremely well-organized conference. The panel sessions, spread over four days, offered a wide coverage of research on modern South Asia, while a number of recent documentaries on South Asian topics were also featured.

As the number of panels has increased considerably over the last decade - from nineteen at the twelfth conference in Tours, France, in 1994 to forty this year - participants, unfortunately, were forced to choose from among ten parallel sessions daily. Of course the organizers of the conference readily admitted to this. As professor S.K. Mitra, present director of the SAI, already remarked in his introduction, “in spite of the best will in the world, no international conference can make every panel available to everyone”. The panels were organized around leading disciplines ranging from anthropology and religious studies to politics and linguistics; others focused on interdisciplinary themes like identity and diaspora. Current issues such as the relationship between India and Pakistan, the Kashmir conflict, and the nuclear capacities of India and Pakistan were also touched upon. Furthermore there seems to be a tendency to organize panels on specific regions, e.g. on the Himalaya area, on Indian states - as in Rajasthan Studies and Tamil Studies - and on the various countries of the South Asian subcontinent such as Bangladesh and Sri Lanka. Details of the panels and papers can be found on the Internet site of the conference (→ 2).

The conference coincided with the fortieth anniversary of the founding of the SAI, which consists of eight departments and has become a major centre for interdisciplinary research and teaching. Results of interdisciplinary research were rendered visible by means of the exhibition Benares. Views of a Holy City at the Völkerkundemuseum of Heidelberg, which could be visited by a guided tour.

Considering the number of participants and the increase of contributions, this conference was certainly successful. The next European Conference on Modern South Asian Studies, to be hosted by SASNET (Swedish South Asian Studies Network) and Lund University, will be held from 6 to 9 July 2004 in Lund, Sweden.

Netty Bonouvrié
n.c.bonouvrie@let.leidenuniv.nl

1 http://www.iias.nl
2 http://www.sai.uni-heidelberg.de/ecmsa/